Many many thanks to Mark Marquess who poured his heart and soul into Stanford baseball for 41 years. A great person. Hate to see it end

9 was tough, old-fashioned, stubborn, particular, and intense. Also caring, honorable, brilliant and good-hearted.

For 9, there was no question he would include a young student broadcaster in his program. I wasn't good enough to play for him (1)

But I was a Stanford student. So that meant I should be included in the team. Travel, pregame interviews, trips to Omaha. (2)

Mark Marquess intensely wanted to win. But for him there was an even higher purpose, and he fit everyone, including me, into that (3)

@FlemmingDave Look where it got you!
And it all started with @StanfordBSB.

Nostalgia hovering over the Farm tonight.

Sad to see the Marquess era @Stanford come to an end. Baseball was only a piece of his impact - he coached boys to become men. Thank you, 9!

Thank you for everything, Coach Marquess. 41 years of history sealed in the Stanford books tonight.

Incredible career, fantastic season. Happy retirement, 9. And congratulations to Cal State Fullerton—those guys played lights-out this week. twitter.com/StanfordBSB/st...

9 gives one final wave of appreciation to the crowd. What a run. Hasn't hit me that it's over.

41 years, 1627 wins, 2 nat'l titles later, Mark Marquess' Stanford coaching career over. What a run, they don't make em like that anymore

Back before Week 1, when Fullerton played Stanford, Rick Vanderhook told me this about Mark Marquess. d1baseball.com/featured/break... pic.twitter.com/TgVZsLOmPl

"It makes me humbled that I get to actually coach against him again," Vanderhook said. "I couldn't guess in my career — I would say I have played against coach Marquess like 60 times. Almost like he was in my league as a league coach. Just the way that he's always treated everyone, and I can't speak for everyone but I can speak for Rick Vanderhook — him and (former Marquess lieutenant) Dean Stotz from the 1980s to today have treated me no different from one decade to the next. That is kind of different in our business."
